Synopsis

NO ESCAPE

The story opens in a small town in the midst of oil refineries. There is a boarding house run by Caille (Charles Vanel), an elderly man who has designs on the affections of his dead son's widow . . . Cora (Magali Noel). Cora, a beautiful and passionate woman, is sick of the monotonous life in her father-in-law's boarding house, without its hopes for the future. The maid Denise (Betty Schneider) is a bitter woman, full of hatred for all those living within the house. Gino is an escaped criminal who, under an assumed name, acquires a room at this fateful boarding house. It is not long before Cora and Gino become attracted to each other and Cora becomes his mistress. They are constantly spied upon by Denise, who accidentally discovers Gino's true identity as an escaped criminal, and hastens to inform the owner of the house. Caille demands that Gino leave, and Cora states that if he leaves she will follow him. To keep her father-in-law silent about Gino's identity she promises to have an affair with him. She then plots with Gino an escape . . . one in which it will appear as though they were killed in a burning truck and appoint the hour. In the meantime, Cora's father-in-law comes to collect his promise but Cora refuses to go through with her part of the bargain and a struggle ensues in which she kills the old man.

Gino, seeing that Cora has not shown up for their appointment, rushes back to the house. By this time police have surrounded the area and the spiteful maid has accused Cora of killing Caille. However, the police will only believe that they have found the killer in the captured Gino, despite Cora's protestations that it was she who killed Caille.
