In Messidor two young female hitchhikers, the children of Swiss prosperity, take to the road on a frightening yet exhilarating odyssey of discovery. They challenge themselves to continue the journey even after their money runs out, and encounter a world of crime, hostility and violence. The young women learn that wanderlust is an act of terrorism in a culture where social rigidity insures affluence. Fluid and visually stunning, Messidor was called by Variety "a remarkable and harrowing filmic scanning of Tanner's own heart of darkness, Switzerland."
